Christine Clarke

Clarke named to Mass. post

The USDA Natural Resources Conservation Service has selected Christine S. Clarke to serve as state conservationist for Massachusetts. Clarke currently serves as leader of the agency's national Geographic Information System Laboratory and as NRCS geodata co-ordinator.

A Rhode Island native, Clarke began her career with the agency in the Newport field office and then as a soil scientist with the U.S. Peace Corps and U.S. Agency for International Development in Jamaica.

Clarke has served as acting director of the National Geospatial Development Center in Morgantown, W.V., standards lead for Geospatial One-Stop, NRCS representative to the federal Geographic Data Committee, National Soil Digitizing co-ordinator and GIS specialist, Morgantown, W.V.

Clarke holds a bachelor's degree from the University of Rhode Island in resource development and soil science and a graduate certificate from the University of Connecticut in GIS. She is a certified soil scientist.

Christine is the daughter of Bill and Marian Clarke of Howland Avenue.

MURPHY'S LAW

When you admit to "carrying water" for someone whose actions/policies you did not fully support, without having candidly shared your misgivings, your credibility may be irretrievably damaged.

In our island environment, human control of the exponentially expanding deer herd is an absolute necessity. The form in which the human control is undertaken may be debatable, but to question its necessity is unreasonable.

The word "if" does not belong in an apology.

There are civil remedies for harassment. Criminal penalties may also be imposed.
