in March. The meeting will be open to the community. "We're happy and excited about the results, but we still look for improvements to make," Almazor added.

Almazor also noted that the Jamestown district is unique in that every student receives an individual reading assessment at the beginning of the school year. "We do our best to create individual goals for every student," she said.

School Committee Chairwoman Cathy Kaiser noted that the high-performance of both schools "is a testament to the increased efforts of our teachers and administrators, who have created an individualized learning plan for every student."

Kaiser said that the administration understands from parental feedback that the district "must continue to increase the rigor of our academics."
