

New way to donate cars to charities

Although vehicle donation programs are currently operated by a large number of national charities, only Cars4Charities offers the donor the opportunity to donate a vehicle to one of over 1,000 national and local charities.

Cars4Charities also offers the unique option of completing the entire donation process online, 24-hours a day, at www.cars4charities.org.

In addition to helping a very needy charity, donors are eligible for a tax deduction of $500 or what their car is sold for, whichever is greater.

Cars4Charities handles the entire donation process, turning cars into cash and sending the entire net proceeds to the charity selected by the donor. The towing is free and vehicles are picked up in a matter of days. Cars4Charities accepts most cars in the Rhode Island area for donation, old or new, running or not. Complete details are available at www.cars4charities.org or 1-866-448-3487.

Marshall leadership cited

Secretary of State A. Ralph Mollis has honored a Jamestown student with the 2007 State High School Civic Leadership Award, which is given annually to seniors who make outstanding contributions to civic and community affairs.

This year's 2007 State High School Civic Leadership Award winner from Jamestown is Michael Marshall of North Kingstown High School.

"This award recognizes students who show an understanding of the importance of civic duty in a democratic society," Mollis said. "These students take the principles of civics and put them into action through their community and civic involvement, as well as their personal academic success."

Secretary of State Mollis asked high schools around the state to select one male and one female member of the senior class who best met the ideals of the award: civic contributions made within the school or community, government interest, leadership ability and academic achievement.

Secretary of State Mollis oversees many aspects of federal, state and municipal elections held in Rhode Island. His office also publishes guidebooks that include important dates in the election cycle
