Archbishop of Canterbury to visit island

The Most Reverend George Carey, former Archbishop of Canterbury, will be speaking at Saint Matthew's Episcopal Church in Jamestown on Sunday, Oct. 21, at 7 p.m. The topic of his address will be "Christianity and Islam: Is a clash inevitable?"

Lord Carey served as the 103rd Archbishop of Canterbury from 1991 to 2002. Following the events of Sept. 11, 2001, Archbishop Carey became very involved in efforts to encourage dialogue between Christians and Muslims. In January of 2002 he initiated and hosted an inaugural gathering at his London residence, Lambeth Palace, between Christian and Muslim scholars from around the globe, with the intention of creating an on-going dialogue between these two great faiths. Under the leadership of Lord Carey's successor, Archbishop Rowan Williams, the dialogue has continued with annual gatherings in various locations, including Muslim countries.

Following his retirement in October of 2002, Lord Carey has continued to be intimately involved in efforts to bring Muslims and Christians together for dialogue. He is currently serving as the co-chair for the "Council of 100," an initiative of the "World Economic Forum" which seeks to promote dialogue and cooperation between the Western and Islamic Worlds.

The Reverend Kevin Lloyd, rector of Saint Matthew's Parish, and his wife, Julia, both served on Archbishop Carey's staff at Lambeth Palace in 2001 and 2002.

Volunteer to be a friendly visitor

Child & Family Services of Newport has an immediate need for Friendly Visitors who visit the homebound elderly on a regular basis.

They have elders who are confined to their home and are waiting for visitors in Tiverton, Portsmouth, Middletown and Newport. These elders have very few social contacts and would welcome a visit from someone who cares about them. Volunteers might chat, read, play cards or take their elder for a ride. However, the most important consideration is to be a good listener. Hours are flexible. A one-year commitment preferred. Call the volunteer office at 848-4210 for more information.
