Spring exhibit at Island 10 Cinema

Island 10 Cinema off West Main Road in Middletown has offered the society the opportunity to acquaint a wider audience with the history of Jamestown. This May and June the display case in the lobby at the theater will feature the ferryboats that ran between Jamestown and Newport. The planned exhibit contains models of many of the ferries, including new models of the Governor Carr and Beavertail lent to the society by model-maker Roland Parent. The Governor Carr, built in 1927, was the last ferry built specifically for the Jamestown-Newport run, and the display will include photographs of her construction.

The ferries were discontinued in 1969 when the Newport Bridge (now the Claiborne Pell Bridge) opened, giving travelers a more convenient - if less relaxing - way to cross Narragansett Bay.

Summer exhibit at the Jamestown Museum

This summer's exhibit at the Jamestown Museum will celebrate education and schools on Jamestown. Harry Wright is the curator, bringing together records and artifacts about how young people were taught from the early days of the town. The first public one-room schoolhouse was built in Jamestown in 1804, although town records from as early as 1731 contain evidence of public support for teachers maintaining private schools. Eighteenth century samplers in our collection show how training in sewing skills did double duty in teaching the alphabet.

High school has always been off-island and for many years Jamestown students rode the ferry to Newport to attend Rogers High School - so ferries will be part of this exhibit, too.

For many of you, the exhibit will be a nostalgic visit to your own past. If you have something from your school days that you would like to share, please let us know, so we can plan to include it in the exhibit. Call Harry at 423-2978 or email jhs@jamestownri.com with your suggestions.
