Lecture focuses on glorification of forensic science

A Hofstra University law professor will discuss, "Legal Dilemmas in Forensic Evidence" on Friday, Sept. 26, at the University of Rhode Island's Forensic Science Seminar.

Professor J. Herbie DiFonzo's lecture will be held from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m. in Pastore Hall, 51 Lower College Rd., Room 124 and is free and open to the public.

DiFonzo will discuss how popular television shows such as CSI have glorified forensic science and how this may be influencing jurors in criminal cases. He will shine a light on the "CSI Effect" and whether it is, in fact, changing the perceptions of jurors and the way that attorneys present their cases. With the notable exception of DNA typing, several widely used forensic techniques may be scientifically unreliable and lacking in validity. He will explain that even though DNA analysis is currently the most valuable forensic tool, it is still subject to human error.

DiFonzo has had a long career as a federal prosecutor and criminal defense attorney. As a law professor at Hofstra University, he directed the Criminal Justice Clinic for eight years.

For more information, call Dave Lavalley at 874-5862.

Where in the World is the Jamestown Press?

Bill Hamel, and his friend Bryan Johnson, took the Press to South Dakota while on a three-week working vacation. Bill's motorcycle and sidecar were used as a platform to do a photo shoot, which will be used for the 2009 Indian Motorcycle advertisements.
