MURPHY'S LAW

The distinctions between an employee and an independent contractor are important for business owners to know.

All business operators should periodically determine with their accountant and/or legal counsel that workers engaged by the business are properly classified into these two categories.

Although there are federal and state mandates relating to independent contractors, the obligations of employers to employees are considerably more extensive.

The obligations of a business to its employees are a critically important factor in the determination of the most basic question for all entrepreneurs: is the enterprise practically sustainable?
